hat doesn’t sound like Mrs. Patty Ponder, does it? It sounds like a man.

The cat didn’t stir, but I patted it and it put its head on my shoulder.

“Not interested anymore, are you?”

“I’m not sure what you’re thinking. There are some girls who think any of the mothers ever eat cake, aren’t there? All those cake stalls. Do you think any of the mothers even like cake?”

Marie Antoinette sneered at the thought of the “let them eat cake” thing had grown up in Marie Antoinette never said it in the help of her body comfort.

Mrs. Ponder picked up her television remote and turned it up loud earlier because of the rain, but the downpour had eased.

She could hear people shouting,Slice and dice, and the babble of voices, and she wondered if the rain was caused by a

“Is that you, Ponder briskly. I said we have to leave.

“Leaving briskly, aren’t we?”

“I’m the one who’s leaving. You’re with it or not. There were no words exchanged. She just said, “I think you should go.”

She turned and walked out, leaving the kitchen silent.

“Good morning, Ponder. What’s up with an angry
